

Why you shouldn't stress about your nonprofit's single audit

Most people cringe when they hear the words “single audit.” But here’s the thing: There’s no need to fear. Here are a few things you can do for a stress-free Single Audit.

1

Understand your award letter and program.

Once your organization signs an award agreement that includes federal funds, it must comply with specific terms and conditions and it's important to fully understand these terms.

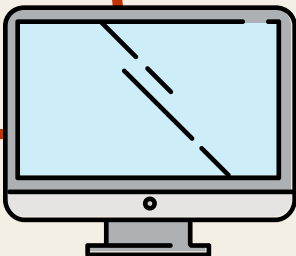

2

Turn to your awarding agency for help.

Your award document should outline exactly what your organization must do to comply, but you can call your federal awarding agency or pass-through grantor to ask for guidance if needed.

3

Review the freely available Compliance Supplement.

The federal government releases a compliance supplement that explains everything you need to know about the Single Audit - found at whitehouse.gov

4

Work with a Single Audit expert.

You're not alone in this. Believe it or not, there are people in your corner who enjoy doing this, too! Our team can walk you through each step - providing insight and guidance along on the path forward.
